

This aquatic insect is called a back-swimmer. It has a piercing mouthpart used for sucking plant juices or killing tadpoles and small fish. It has a painful bite if you handle it so beware!

Crayfish, also called crawdads, are related to lobsters and look like miniature versions of them. They live in unpolluted streams and eat living and dead animals and plants. They are shy and burrow into the mud to hide.